

Facilitating climate-related risk management with the Climate Predictability Tool

Developing countries tend to lack infrastructure, and this lends them to being especially vulnerable to short-term climate related variance, such as drought, wildfires, or flood.

The CPT was designed to help mitigate these risks by allowing local meteorological organizations to make their own prediction models. The map above is an attempt to document the spread of training associated with the CPT.